

Operation

Going east in the subway, there is a stop at the point of switch on Washington Street, for interchange of passengers. For the outgoing traffic a stop is made on private right-of-way just east of Washington Street. Here also is a small waiting room. The unloading track in the subway will take care of ten cars at one time if necessary. The loading tracks will handle fifteen cars.

An electrically operated switch and spacing block system is installed for both the subway and elevated tracks so that cars for the different lines will be segregated and handled with dispatch. In case of a block in the Terminal subway the double crossover under Military Park will serve as a means to get cars in and out of the platforms without tying up traffic. All the mail is received and delivered from the mail room on the sub-surface level and a single elevator runs direct from the mail room through the concourse floor and up to the train floor, so that mail is received and delivered via the electric cars.
